THE PRIME MINISTER

I am delighted to send the Bahá'í communities of the United Kingdom my warmest wishes to mark the bicentenary of the birth of Bahá'u'lláh.

The impact of Bahá'u'lláh's teachings cannot be underestimated. His life, his teachings and his compassion continue to inspire people around the world, and we can all learn from his generosity and wisdom.

The UK Bahá'í community is an important part of British society. It contributes to a more peaceful and unified society through its commitment to universal education, equality and social progress.

Once again, I send my best wishes as Bahá'ís all over the country, along with those around the world, come together to commemorate the birth of Bahá'u'lláh.
